Students spend a great deal of time in their residence hall. Their experiences in the residence halls can have a major impact on academic performance and overall personal growth. Through hall governments, intramural sports, education workshops, and other activities, the University strives to meet students' diverse needs by making the residence hall a living-learning experience. Resident Assistants (RAs) are students who, under the direction of the Resident Director, help residents adjust to college life. They are available as sources of information about the University and its policies, as peacemakers to insure that the hall provides an atmosphere conducive to study, and as good listeners to those needing someone with whom to talk. RAs also strive to get their residents involved in hall and campus activities.
